Values: Work Importance Locator - My Scores [Save | Print]

Using Your Work Values to Explore Occupations

You can use your work values to explore careers. Work values are good to use because you probably will find that occupations that meet your work values will be more satisfying and rewarding for you than occupations that don't meet your work values.

Remember, though, that work values are just some of the information that you can use to explore careers. Other useful information about yourself:

- your abilities,
- your interests,
- experience,
- education, and
- motivation

The links for each Work Value will display a list of occupations that match that value. You can then use the occupation links to learn more about the occupation.

Independence and Relationships

Follow the link above to display a list of occupations for which both of your top two values are important.

Independence Your Score: 24

People for whom independence is important like to make decisions and try out ideas on their own. They prefer jobs where they can plan their work with little supervision.

Relationships Your Score: 20

People for whom relationships are important like to work in a friendly, non-competitive environment. They like to do things for other people. They prefer jobs where they are not pressured to do things that go against their sense of right and wrong.

The remaining four work values are listed below. Even though they aren't your highest work values, you may want to explore their occupation lists. For work values that are somewhat important to you, you can find out which occupations still might suit you. For work values that are not important to you, you can find out which occupations you might be less suited for.

Achievement Your Score: 18

People for whom achievement is important like to see the results of their work and to use their strongest abilities. They like to get a feeling of accomplishment from their work.

Working Conditions Your Score: 18
